PREFATORY NOTE.

Among the earliest appointments to the Academic Staff of the Johns Hopkins University made by the Board of Trustees was that of Arthur Marshall Elliott on June 5, 1876, to be an Associate in Languages, and it is in commemoration of the twentieth anniversary of this most important event in the history of the Romance Studies of America, representing as it does the beginning of a double decennium of incessant effort to raise the standard of modern linguistic work in the New World, that this first fascicule of a Manual of Æsopic Fable Literature is issued by one of his pupils as a tribute and memorial of a long period of labor under his direction and inspiration.

By a singular coincidence this same date of June 5, 1896, marks approximately the close of a decennium of continuous attendance at the Johns Hopkins University by the author of the present book, and at once a lustrum of association with Professor Elliott in his work in Fable Literature, the special subject to which this publication is devoted.

INTRODUCTION.

Fable Literature, taking the term in its most general sense, may be said to include all forms of animal tales in which a moral purpose is evident. Such tales appear to have existed at all times and among all peoples, and the attempt to trace mutual relations between them in their oral form appears to be a well-nigh hopeless task. It is only when they definitely appear as literature and are consigned to writing that tangible results in this direction are attainable to the modern scholar.

Fable Literature as a whole may be divided into three main groups: Bidpai Literature, Æsopic Fables and the Animal Epic. Each of these has its problems, each of these has its charms; but it is with the second of them as lying more especially within the domain of the author's habitual studies that the present Manual is exclusively concerned.

Indeed it may well be claimed that in the usual acceptation of the English term, Fable refers exclusively to this class of literature, whilst the other two classes (if known at all) are considered merely as cognate branches.

Having thus already greatly restricted the scope of the present work, it will be necessary to explain that even the Æsopic Fable in its entirety has seemed to the author too large a subject for treatment here, and that he has therefore given items of information only for the period extending from the earliest known times of the Æsopic Fable, as manifested in the extant writings of the Greeks, down to the close of the Fifteenth Century, an epoch when manuscript copying as the recognized means of recording man's thoughts gave way to book printing and the general external aspect of literature in consequence changed to its modern form.

The chief aim in the compilation of such a manual has been to provide scholars with a handy book of first reference which would serve as a general guide to the subject from whatever side it might happen to be approached. Its scope, therefore, is quite different from that of the best work of a similar nature now in the hands of scholars—Joseph Jacobs' History of the Æsopic Fable—its aim being merely to present the bare facts as far as they are known to the author, while leaving all constructive reasoning if not entirely to other writers at least to another occasion.

Should the present Manual some day reach completion, a vast mass of the dry bones of literary history will no doubt have therein been presented; but, however great it may have been possible to make such a collection of raw material, the extent of this field of literature is so immense that at least as much more will probably still remain to be gleaned by those that come after. Should any one be inclined to doubt the approximate truth of this statement, the author would politely recommend him to inspect M. Hervieux' immense publication on Latin Fable Literature alone as evidencing the possibilities of attainment still open to the investigator in other less cultivated fields of Mediæval Literature as regards the Æsopic Fable.

In any case it is evident that much, very much, still remains to be done in this field of literature which was once so popular with the learned, and which is even yet familiar in its best specimens to all educated people—for it would probably be a difficult task indeed to find an intelligent person who had never heard of the Hare and the Tortoise say, or the Mouse and the Lion, or any one of a dozen of the best-known fables.

Subjects for Investigation.

The general problem in this connection before the scholar of to-day may be fitly divided into three heads:

discovery, critical editing, and correlation. It is the author's hope that the present Manual, when completed, may be of some assistance for the first and last of these categories at least by furnishing the investigator with a convenient tool to aid him in making new conquests in the domain of the still unknown. To accomplish this result his aim has been to compile the pertinent information given by the best authorities on the subject in hand, and at the same time to add as far as possible new material derived from his own reading, thus producing on a limited scale a thesaurus of information concerning the Æsopic Fable in its period of greatest influence.

It would seem, indeed, that it will be only by gathering together such scattered bits of information and by making them generally known that any great advance in such a difficult field of research will be possible to us, and it is perhaps not too much to hope that the present Manual may serve as a nucleus for such work and as a starting-point for a more scientific treatment of the bibliography of so large a subject.

A few general notions may perhaps be here not inappropriately set forth of the work that is still to be done in Æsopic Fable Literature:

1. A thorough search for new manuscripts containing collections of fables is yet to be made in the various public and private libraries, especially of Europe, which no doubt still contain many treasures of this sort as yet unknown to the scholarly world.

As an instance of the possibilities in this direction there may be mentioned the fact that only a few months ago M. Paul Meyer, the well-known Romance scholar and palæographer, was able to announce* the discovery of a new manuscript of the Old French collection of fables written by Marie de France, perhaps the most talented of all the Mediæval fabulists. If this is still possible in the case of so celebrated an author and for a large public library like the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris, what may we not yet hope to find in the case of less known authors and smaller libraries? A bibliographical contribution to this side of Æsopic Fable Literature is included in the proposed plan for the present Manual, though postponed to a later fascicule.

2. With the art of printing as a means of literary propagation came a revival of interest in Æsopic Fable Literature, and for the first century or two after its invention editions of the various collections then in vogue followed each other with great rapidity. An individual and also a comparative study of these editions is surely an important part of the fable investigator's task, besides offering much of interest from other points of view. It is with this aspect of the subject that the present fascicule is chiefly concerned, and in spite of the rather formidable array which it has been so far possible for the author to set up, it seems not unlikely that the discoveries still to be made in this direction will be even greater than in the case of the manuscripts, for in spite of the excellent work done by the numerous and justly celebrated bibliographers of the present as well as of the last century, it seems that but a beginning has been made in this sphere of investigation.

3. Citations of Æsopic fables in illustration of some point in an author's works have at all times been numerous, and in addition to this there are to be found many references to this sort of literature which are of value especially in an investigation of the earliest phases of its development. This class of citations and references, while of considerable importance to fable scholars, is perhaps the most difficult of all to control. It would seem that hitherto only a small portion of them have been collected by the various investigators, and it is therefore hoped to make the present Manual especially full in this direction.

4. The text of every collection of fables should, of course, be subjected to careful critical editing, and all the special information concerning it should be painstakingly examined and thoroughly sifted by a competent scholar in each case. This has unfortunately been done for only a few of the many extant collections, and is, of course, a sphere of scholarly usefulness falling wholly without the scope of the present work.

5. Each one of the known Æsopic Fable collections should be carefully compared as a whole with its cognate collections in order to ascertain as far as this is possible the relations in which it stands to the latter. This is a species of investigation peculiarly difficult in its very nature, but one which has already received considerable attention because of its psychological allurements, and which may therefore be considered as fairly well worked out by the many celebrated scholars who have expended their critical acumen upon this part of the general field.

6. Lastly, each separate fable should be made the subject of a comparative literary study as an individual entity and its gradual development and endless wanderings from writer to writer and country to country be subjected to careful investigation. Hitherto but few such attempts have been made, and even these are rather incomplete it would seem; as a sine qua non for this sort of study it is proposed to include in this Manual, as being perhaps its most important feature, a General Index of Fables giving under each title as complete a list as possible of the places where it is to be found, together with numerous cross references to the various cognate forms which exist for almost every fable.

Intrinsic Value of the Æsopic Fable.

In addition to all this work which is still to be done on the formal side of a complete study of Æsopic Fable Literature there remains a set of deeper questions regarding the intrinsic value of the Fable both from a moral and from an artistic standpoint, and innumerable minor questions which are more or less closely connected with the more general subjects of inquiry just mentioned also present themselves. But little appears to have been done as yet in this interesting field for study and mature reflection, and much of what has therein been accomplished may no doubt be justly placed to the credit of that enthusiastic fable investigator of the last century, Gotthold Ephraim Lessing.

This writer's philosophical analysis of the true inwardness of the Æsopic Fable may well stand perusal and reperusal, as it clearly shows the essential points which constitute the various species when at their best, while incidentally proving that the vast majority of fabulists have had only the most rudimentary conception of the scope and true purpose of their chosen field of literary endeavor. It clearly appears from this treatment of the subject that our most popular fables embody just these principles, while the great mass of practically unknown fables have remained so because of their failure to include in themselves one or more of the characteristics essential to a lasting success.

Mode of Construction and Limitations of the First Fascicule.

In the compilation of the General Bibliography the aim has been to present a list of the chief contributions to a study of Fable Literature both for the subject as a whole and for the single branch of it treated more in detail in the present Manual.

The citations of book titles have been made very full in order that such information might be given in even a limited space as would serve to indicate their general scope to those who may never have had the opportunity of seeing the books themselves. The skeleton citation of book titles so much in vogue seems to the writer a matter to be especially deplored in this age of scientific exactness, as such scanty notices are usually tantalizing rather than satisfying, and more often do they perhaps lead the novice astray than they actually convey desired information to the veteran.

With the complete list of books on Fable Literature here cited before him any student may approach the subject for serious study without great misgivings as to a lack of the necessary material for general investigations, though of course hundreds of other books more or less germane to the subject and more or less important in themselves could easily have been cited. Text editions as such have been rigidly excluded from this list for obvious reasons, and also because they belong rather to other more special portions of the present Manual.

It is believed that the various lists given in connection with the general subject of Fable Incunabula will prove to be of considerable assistance for a further study of this subject, as properly speaking no such lists appear to have been hitherto attempted, for although both Brunet and Hervieux* have made valuable and extensive contributions to this field, their work was conceived in quite a different spirit from that here attempted, which, it may be remarked, is necessarily based to a considerable extent upon the results already attained by them.

The British Museum Catalogue of Printed Books comes nearer perhaps to the plan of the lists here given than any other such publication, but its sphere of action is of course limited to the specimens contained in a single great library,

* M. Hervieux' recently published volume on Odo of Sherington did not appear in time to be included in the list of his publications given on pages 1 and 2 of this Manual; as no incunabula are, however, referred to in this new volume, the present fascicule has not thereby been deprived of any additional information. The complete title of the book is as follows: Les Fabulistes Latins depuis le Siècle d'Auguste jusqu'à la Fin du Moyen Âge. Tome IV: Eudes de Cheriton et ses Dérivés. Paris: librairie de Firmin-Didot et Cie., 56 Rue Jacob, 1896. 8vo, viii and 482 pp.

The inclusion of the Dialogus Creaturarum commonly attributed to Nicolaus Pergamenus and of two of the Specula of Vincentius Bellovacensis in these lists may perhaps be considered by some critics as unnecessary and uncalled for, but in any case it would appear that no particular excuse for their presence is here demanded unless it be the possible plea of supererogatory merit.

In consulting the various bibliographies and books of reference while compiling the lists here given, it has been a matter of much surprise to the author to find that in the vast majority of cases the descriptions given were rather scanty, sometimes even meagre to the last degree; and he has hence in certain cases attempted to supply the information which was lacking, either by way of implication or by way of conjecture. Had this plan not been followed, the descriptions given would have been in many cases mere skeletons of perhaps a single item, and hence of but little use to any one; the author, however, does not pretend to be in any sense of the word wiser than his sources, and therefore earnestly recommends all readers to look up for themselves the references given, and thus to use the present Manual merely as a guide and not in any way as a possible authority on the subject.

Some slips have undoubtedly been made, especially in the attempt to assign an approximate date to all undated editions, and it is to be hoped that these blemishes will be to a considerable extent corrected by persons able to judge intelligently of such matters.

Peculiarities of orthography occurring in the originals have been kept where known, but the great majority of them have probably been omitted by the various bibliographers whose works have been drawn upon.

Besides the numerous cases in which the descriptions furnished by the bibliographers afford conflicting evidence, the chief matter of regret must remain the fact that it has been their almost universal custom to omit a statement as to whether their material was derived at first hand or not; to obviate this difficulty as much as possible, the statement that an actual inspection of the work in question has been made by the bibliographer cited, is given in a foot-note wherever there appeared to be sufficient justification for so doing.

It has given the author especial pleasure to have been able to point out the existence of several extant copies of Fable Incunabula now preserved in American libraries, as none of them appear to have been known to previous bibliographers. The treasures of this sort still hidden away in the public and private libraries of Europe, and perhaps even of America and other continents, are probably quite considerable as they are of a sort extremely difficult of control through the usual manuals.

Finally, it is hoped that the generous use made of bold-faced type together with the numerous Reference Lists appended, will make the present Manual one of easy and rapid reference—an essential characteristic of such a work only too often overlooked by compilers.

Non Vidimus.

The general practice in this Manual has been to give only references which have been obtained at first hand. In some cases, however, it has seemed advisable to include a certain number of references obtained merely at second hand, as at the moment a personal inspection of the works cited was impossible, and as by following any other rule there would have arisen inconvenient gaps in some of the lists given.

In order to make the best possible amends for this unavoidable blemish it is my purpose to state here quite distinctly which books I have not seen with my own eyes, with the direct implication that all the other books mentioned have been so inspected:

Page 6, Nos. 1, 2, 4, 5, 6;
Page 7, Nos. 8, 9, 10, 13; and No. 2 in the next list;
Pages 9 to 28, Nos. 1 to 63 and 65 to 178;
Pages 28 to 53, all the references in the body of the text, except No. 64*a*.

Description of Facsimiles.

It will have been noticed that in the earlier days of the printing-press very large-sized editions were prevailingly issued, a statement which is corroborated by the fact that all of the editions herein cited up to A. D. 1500 are either folios or quartos. Including the present fascicule there are specimen pages of at least two such large-sized editions accessible to the general reader in facsimile, and it has been deemed of interest to likewise insert by way of contrast facsimiles from two small-sized editions of Æsop's Fables from the seventeenth century. The latter are given merely as representatives of a style of printing differing widely at once from the earliest and from the latest usage for such works.

1. In his valuable treatise on Early Illustrated Books,* Mr. Alfred W. Pollard has given a reduced facsimile of a page from one of Antonius Sorg's reprints of the original Ulm edition of Stainhöwel's Esopus.† The page chosen contains an illustration representing the situation in the fable entitled: De Ranis et Ioue, which is considered by Mr. Pollard to be one of the best illustrations in the whole work. The portion of the Latin text occurring on the same page is quite legible in the facsimile in spite of its reduced size.

* Early Illustrated Books; a History of the Decoration and Illustration of Books in the 15th and 16th Centuries; by Alfred W. Pollard. London: Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner (and) Co., Ltd., 1893. 8vo, xvi and 256 pp., with numerous illustrations. See page 52.

† Cf. page 13 of this Manual, Nos. 38 and 39; the facsimile was probably taken from the copy No. 39*c* referred to on page 36.

2. The largest of the three facsimiles herewith given has been taken from a copy which was one of the more valuable books of the large collection bequeathed to the Johns Hopkins University by the late John W. McCoy. The volume is handsomely bound in parchment, but has been erroneously lettered as follows: Æsopi | Fabulæ | Editio | Princeps | Germanicæ | 1483.

Far from being the original German edition of Æsop's Fables, our book is merely a reprint of the German text alone of Stainhöwel's Latin and German edition of Ulm about the year 1475.* It can, however, probably claim the distinction of being the oldest edition of the German version issued separately whose date is fixed by the printer's colophon. M. Hervieux has had the good fortune of being able to inspect two other copies of this edition (the only copies hitherto known to exist, it would seem), and according to his description the book is a folio of 169 leaves, of which the Life of Æsop and the text of the fables occupy the first 154 leaves, while the remainder contain a work entitled Historia Sigismunde.

The McCoy copy is unfortunately not entirely complete, though the lost portions are of no great extent. The first 34 leaves contain the Life of Æsop already mentioned and preceded by a full-page portrait headed Esopus on the verso of the first leaf. The leaves in this portion of the book are entirely devoid of any numbering. The text is headed as follows:

Vita Esopi fabulatoris clarissimi e greco | latina per Rimicin(m) facta ad reuerendissimu(m) | patrem dominum Anthonium Tituli sancti | Chrisogoni prespiterum Cardinalem.

The entire text, however, is in German, as we find explained further down the page by the words:

. . . ausz latein von doctore heinrico steinho | wel schlecht vn(d) verstentlich geteütscht.

* Cf. page 16 of this Manual, and the references there given.

Up to this point there appear to be no leaves missing, although the text of the first six has suffered a partial loss at the lower corners, apparently owing to excessive thumbing previous to the time of the present binding.

There then follow 120 numbered leaves containing the text of the fables, but of this series the fifth and sixth leaves are missing. Finally there comes a series of only eight additional unnumbered leaves containing a species of Index Rerum, a portion of the Historia Sigismunde and the printer's colophon. According to M. Hervieux' description there must therefore be seven more leaves missing from the McCoy copy in this portion. Indeed the verso of the next to last leaf breaks off abruptly thus:

sy inwendigen allein dÿe thür auf vnnd nam alldo—

At the top of the recto of the last leaf there occurs a colophon worded thus:

> Esopus der hochberümbt fabeltichter—mit
> etlichen zuogelegten fabeln Rimicy vund > Auiani—vnd d' histori sigismunde der toh-> ter des fürsten Tancredi vnd des iünglin > ges Gwisgardi enndet sich hie—Gedruckt > vnd vollendet in der hochwirdigen vnnd > keiserlichen stat Augspurg—von Antho> nio Sorg am montag nach Agathe Da > man zalt nach Cristi geburt—M—CCCC
> vnd in dem—LXXXIII—Iar—

The remainder of the leaf is blank, and on its verso there is written in pale black ink the name Johannes Schaffhaüsser, probably one of the early owners of this copy.

The present size of the leaves is about seven inches by ten, the type used is the Gothic, and the whole work is adorned by numerous rudely executed wood-cuts. The normal number of lines on full pages appears to be 36, although some have only 35; it is also to be noted that the following leaves are wrongly numbered: leaf xii is given as xiii; leaf liiii has no number; leaf lvi is given as li; leaf xci is given as ci; and leaf cxv is given as cv.

A note in pale black ink on the upper margin of leaf xvi gives evidence of trimming by the binder, who appears to have greatly reduced what was originally a wide margin. The verso of this same leaf has had an extra illustration pasted over the one originally printed in the text, and as the superimposed wood-cut suits the accompanying text yet appears to be wholly different from the one beneath,* though in the same style as the remaining illustrations, we may suppose that the printer erroneously inserted an irrelevant wood-cut in his text at this point, and discovering this fact after the leaf was printed struck off special copies of the proper illustration and thus corrected his original error as well as he could. It would be of interest to note whether the same thing was done in the case of the other two copies mentioned above.

Many of the illustrations have been touched up with either black or red ink, and various marginal notes and other marks are to be found which are evidently due to some one or more of the early possessors of this copy.

A point worthy of note, and one which would probably suffice to easily identify all the extant copies of this edition, is that in certain cases a blank space has been left in the body of the text which should have been filled out by some word not inserted by the printer. Thus among the unnumbered leaves at the beginning of the book there is a blank space in the last line on the verso of the twenty-first leaf, and on the recto of the third numbered leaf there are three such spaces, the first of which has been filled in with a pen, the second crossed out, and the third left blank. It is this last-mentioned page which has been chosen for presenting in facsimile, as the occurrence of such a series of blank spaces is perhaps the most curious feature in the whole book.

* This illustration is no doubt the same as the one correctly inserted in the text on the recto of leaf li.

The original is about one-fourth larger in its dimensions than would appear from the facsimile, in which the wide margin has also been much reduced. As the paper in the original is rather thin, and as at the same time the ink used is extremely black, there are noticeable in the facsimile faint traces of the wood-cut on the verso as well as of the accompanying text itself.

The wood-cuts used in this edition are probably identical with those occurring in that from which Mr. Pollard's facsimile was taken, as the one there reproduced also occurs in the McCoy copy here described.

3. The first of the two smaller facsimiles given represents very accurately the appearance of the original, excepting that the whole background is of the mellow tint which even the whitest of paper assumes with age. The two pages chosen represent the end of the diffuse Life of Æsop, which occupies almost all of the preceding portion of the book, and the beginning of the fables themselves. The original is bound in parchment and formerly contained two medallions on the outside of the cover, as well as fastenings of some sort or other. The fly-leaf is occupied by the following inscription:

Ingeniosissimo puero | Cornelio Luackio | Curatores et rector | scholae Brielanae* | Hoc industriae | Praemium | L. M. D. D. | Leonardus Iohannis F. | Theophilus Ryckewaert | Corn. Bunzolzdt | Franciscus Villeius | rector.

* Briel is a fortified seaport town on the north side of the island of Voorne, S. Holland, and lying about fourteen miles west of Rotterdam. From 1585 to 1616 it was held by England as security for certain advances made to the states of Holland, and it was probably some time during this period in its history that the award of the present school-prize occurred.

On the reverse side of the title-page there is given a brief table of contents, and then on page 3 there begins the body of the text with: Ex Aphtho- | nij sophistæ præexerci- | tamentis. On the following page we find: Ex Philo- | strati imaginibus | fabula, with an illustration which is curiously enough repeated on page 10.

On page 7 begins: Æsopi Fa- | bulatoris vita, à Ma- | ximo Planude con- | scripta. This portion of the book contains some thirty-four woodcuts. Thereafter come, as shown in the facsimile, the fables themselves, occupying pages 139–305 and numbered consecutively up to 150. This portion of the book contains fifty-two woodcuts.

Up to this point the Greek text and its Latin translation have been arranged throughout in parallel columns on the same page; but from page 306 to page 363 the two texts are arranged on opposite pages, as is also the case from

Pages 306–333 are occupied by: Gabriæ Græci | Tetrasticha, numbering forty-three fables. Pages 334–363 by: Homeri Ranarum | (et) Murium pugna, after which comes a two-page index of the proper names therein occurring. Four pages are next devoted to a species of preface headed: Aristobulus Apo- | stolicus sacer diaconus iis qui | hoc usuri sunt libro, | S. D.

Pages 370–399 are occupied by a piece entitled: Felium Muriumque | pugna, incerto auctore, followed on page 400 by an index of proper names.

Then come forty-two Latin fables headed: Æsopi Fabulæ XLII | ab Avieno elego | carmine conscriptæ; they are preceded by two short prefaces, and the whole occupies pages 401–427. On page 428 is given a list entitled: Capita Æsopi | Vitae, and this is followed on pages 429–432 by an Index Fabularum, which closes the book.

Another case of a double use being made of the same illustration occurs on pages 169 and 289 for the fables entitled Mulier et Gallina and Gallina auripara respectively. A number of typographical errors have been noticed, and it is a matter of some surprise to find that the two prefaces on pages 401 and 402, as well as fables 30 to 42 of the Avianus collection, have been put in the same small type in which the indices are given.

4. The last facsimile given is taken from another edition of fables of a later date and of a different scope, but of much the same size and typographical workmanship as that just described, the chief exception being the complete omission of illustrations. The two pages chosen represent the beginning of the fables of Aphthonius, although occurring well on towards the end of the book. The original has been inadequately protected from the rough usage which it has received by an indifferent leather binding apparently contemporaneous with the printing.

ΑΦΘΟΝΙΟΥ
ΠΡΟΓΥΜΝΑΣΜΑΤΑ.

APHTHONII SOPHISTÆ PROGYMNASMATA.

FRANCISCO SCOBARIO Interprete : cum Notis & Commentariis Hadamarij.

Eiusdem APHTHONII FABVLÆ nunc primùm in lucem prolatæ.

Editio noua à P. S. I. aucta & recognita, & ad vsum studiosæ iuuentutis accommodata.

PARISIIS,

Apud SIMONEM BENARD, viâ Iacobæâ, sub Imagine Divæ Mariæ de Fide, è Regione Collegij Societatis IESV.

M. DC. LXVI.

The reverse of the title-page together with the ten following pages contain a detailed table of contents of very clumsy typographical workmanship, a few almost wholly illegible signatures being given at the bottom of the pages.

There then follow the Progymnasmata of Aphthonius with a parallel-page Latin translation by Franciscus Scobarius, the whole occupying pages 1–121. Then at length come the fables, as shown in the facsimile, extending to page 161 and being forty in number.

The majority of the pages up to this point have their margins partially filled by short printed critical and explanatory notes, and the remaining seventeen pages of the book arranged in signatures are devoted to a similar set of longer notes entitled: In Aphthonii | Progymnasmata | Scholia. | Ab vno è Societ. Iesu Reuer. Patr. | huic Editioni nunc primùm addita; and: In Aphthonii | Progymnasmata, | Notæ ex Comment. Hadamarii. | In Chria. III. Progymnasmate respectively; the latter with certain marginal notes in print. Typographical errors are numerous in this edition as well, and the printing is on the whole not as satisfactory as that of the earlier edition just described.

* The great majority of the catalogues and bibliographies consulted by me were as a rule so indefinite in their statements that I have been able to include only a few references in this list; to do otherwise would have been giving the semblance of fact to only the merest conjectures for most of the copies not mentioned in this short list.

† This list includes only those names which have not been given in the lists of Sales and Catalogues because of a lack of the necessary information.
